Can you register a .mz domain with an international provider? How to check before paying

Comparisons and alternatives | Created on August 16, 2026 | Updated on October 22, 2026 | 2 min read

It is a fair question: you found cheap international hosting and want to know whether you can register your .co.mz there. The short answer is it depends on the provider - and you can confirm it in under a minute, before paying for anything.

Why not everyone sells .mz

Country extensions are not open to any company. .mz is run by CIUEM, and only those with an accredited connection to the registry can register it. Many international providers sell hundreds of extensions and still do not include .mz - not out of ill will, but because they never went through that accreditation.

How to check in 30 seconds, with any provider

1. Find the list of extensions on their site (usually called Domains, TLDs or Domain pricing).
2. Look for .mz or .co.mz in that list. If it is not there, they do not sell it - and the search box will say "not found" or suggest another extension.
3. Check the renewal price too, not just the first year.
4. When in doubt, e-mail and ask. An answer in writing beats an assumption.

As an example, we ran that check on one of the biggest: Hostinger had dedicated pages for extensions such as .pt and .co.za, but no page for .mz or .ao.

Be careful with anyone who promises everything.
If a site accepts your .mz order without ever listing the extension, confirm before paying. There are cases where the request sits pending for weeks and is refunded in the end.

And if your .mz is already abroad?

Bring it over. The site and e-mail keep working throughout, and you end up with domain, hosting and invoices in one place - see how to transfer a domain .

You do not have to move everything.
You can keep the hosting where it is and have only the domain with us. You set the pointing and it all works - see which nameservers to use .
